

ABSTRACT

Paolo Chiesa, Tripartito = indimostrabile? pp. 1-42

This article deals with a problem of theoretical stemmatics: the impossibility of positively demonstrating the existence of manuscript traditions with more than two branches. The assumption does not imply real criticality in the application of genealogic methods, but can lead to distortions in the analysis of manuscript traditions and in the selectio of variants. The question is addressed with particular reference to the Latin works of the Middle Ages, so far little examined in their complex by scholars. For these works, the incidence of traditions with three or more branches is apparently greater than for the works of classical literature; however, this may depend on a misuse of stemmatic representations, intended as a rough representation of axiological groups of manuscripts, without a strict genealogical analysis of their relationships.

Paolo Chiesa
Università degli Studi di Milano
paolo.chiesa@unimi.it

§

Oronzo Pecere, Il Vat. lat. 4929 e l'esemplare sottoscritto da Rusticio Elpidio Domnulo pp. 43-65

Ms. Vat. lat. 4929 (V) is a miscellany transcribed in the 9th c., probably in the scriptorium of Ferrières, and eventually under the supervision of Lupus himself. It bears two subscriptions, which go back to a late antique manuscript, corrected in Ravenna by Rusticius Elpidius Domnulus. Starting from their paleographic and textual analysis, and thanks also to a reconsideration of the paratextual devices employed in the manuscript, the paper offers a new reconstruction of the models used for the last section of V.

Oronzo Pecere
Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei
oronzo.pecere@gmail.com

§

Rossana Guglielmetti, Twenty Years of Work on the Song of Songs. An Appraisal and a Proposal for Exegetic Studies pp. 67-88

The paper reconstructs a research experience that led to the editio princeps or to the first critical edition of many commentaries on the Song of Songs of the early Middle Ages, and to the clarification both of the relationships among themselves and of the relationships between them and the authors already published. The state of the census from which the work had started, often proved to be misleading, as was inevitable in the absence of critical editions; on the other hand, in order to make these editions effective and well founded, it proved necessary to carry them forward in parallel and make them interact. This specific experience is an example of how the exegetical genre – but in fact every literary genre made up of texts very dependent on each other – would benefit from the experimentation of a new working method: not through limited and independent census and edition projects, but through unitary projects, to be thought in teams, with the aim of an integrated census and publication of all the commentaries on the same biblical book not yet critically published. As in the case of the Song of Songs, such an effort promises to significantly transform both the reliability of the editions of the texts themselves, and our knowledge of the exegetical history of each book (with repercussions also on the evaluation of the specific contribution and modus operandi of each author).

Rossana Guglielmetti
 Università degli Studi di Milano
 rossana.guglielmetti@unimi.it

§

Álvaro Cancela Cilleruelo, Dos opúsculos alcuinianos sobre la Trinidad (ALCPs 16: «Fides Albini magistri» y «Ammonitio eiusdem magistri»): nuevas evidencias pp. 89-134

This paper throws new light on two short Alcuinian texts (ALCPs 16), which have been recently edited by Warren Pezé: a doctrinal treatise on the Trinity (Fides) and a letter (Ammonitio) preserved in two versions. The first version is a collective letter which was probably sent by Alcuin of York to a group of Bavarian bishops; the second version – used by Pezé as the basis for his edition – was directed to an individual anonymous receiver, who is likely to be identified with Arn of Salzburg. Two previously unknown manuscripts of the Fides are identified and a tripartite stemma codicum is established. According to the available evidence, the collective version of the letter (Ammonitio) seems to be something prior to the second one: Alcuin probably wrote the collective version as the basis for the text; afterwards he adapted it and produced a special version for Arn of Salzburg. New sources and parallels from patristic and Carolingian works are identified. As shown by a significant passage, the Fides was used by the author of the Commentary on the Athanasian Creed attributed to Bruno of Würzburg. The evidence from stemmatics, sources and indirect tradition improves the text of the Fides and throws new light on the authenticity of these rare works, which Alcuin of York probably wrote at the end of his life. The collective version of the Ammonitio is critically edited in an appendix and provided with textual observations.

Álvaro Cancela Cilleruelo
 Universidad Complutense de Madrid - Departamento de Filología Clásica
 alvarocancela@ucm.es

§

Matteo Salaroli, Lo «stemma codicum» dei «Gesta Karoli» di Notkero Balbulo pp. 135-202

The Gesta Karoli, written by Notker the Stammerer for the emperor Charles the Fat, are a peculiar biography of Charlemagne, in which the historical account of the sovereign's deeds is interwoven with subtle references to the political situation of the late 9th century. The text as we know it is incomplete, and modern editions have so far failed to accomplish reliable results; however, the impressive amount of information on the tradition of the carolingian corpora provided in recent times by M. Tischler (Einbarts Vita Karoli, 2001) has paved the way towards a more in-depth analysis of Notker's text. The present article, which constitutes the groundwork for a new critical edition, provides a list of all the manuscripts containing the Gesta, and illustrates the results of the collation ex novo of the main textual witnesses; the evaluation of significant variants identified during the recensio leads to the reconstruction of the archetype of the Gesta, and the stemma codicum of all the witnesses is finally drawn up. The evidence obtained through the application of textual criticism is then crossed with the results of Tischler's detailed study, to provide a new hypothesis on the transmission of the text and a new interpretation of the tradition-bond between Notker's Gesta, Einhard's Vita Karoli and the Annales regni Francorum.

Matteo Salaroli
 Università degli studi di Sassari
 ms_787@hotmail.it

§

David A. Traill, A Tale of Two Manuscripts: Arundel 384 and Vat. Lat. 4389
 pp. 203-224

The British Library manuscript, Arundel 384, and the Vatican manuscript, Latin 4389, both contain two poems, Iam vere fere medio by Peter of Blois (canonist), and De grege pontificum by Walter of Châtillon, that are not found elsewhere. Since the first sixteen Arundel poems, all love poems, have been generally attributed to Peter of Blois, and two (17 and 20) of the religious poems (17-23) have also been attributed to him, this paper argues that poems 18 and 19, should also be assigned to him. It also holds that the poems between 21 and 24 (both known to be by Walter) should be attributed to Walter also along with the satires 25 De grege pontificum and 26 Si quis dicit: «Roma, vale». The author of the first eight poems of the Vatican collection is the «no-name» author, while Walter is the author of 9 and Peter of Blois (canonist) is certainly the author of 10 and 12 and probably the author of 11. It seems very likely that the «no-name» author was an admirer of Peter and Walter and was the scribe of the Vatican manuscript. He may also have been the creator of the original manuscript from which Arundel 384 was copied.

David A. Traill
 University of California, Davis
 datraill@ucdavis.edu

§

Francesco Marzella, Towards a New Edition of Geoffrey of Monmouth's «Vita Merlini» pp. 225-56

This preliminary study explores the manuscript tradition of the Vita Merlini, a hexametrical poem (1529 lines) written by Geoffrey of Monmouth in c. 1150. Special attention is paid to MS XVI Q 14 in York Minster Library, a witness that was not used for the editions published so far. A description of the manuscript will be followed by the analysis of some of its variant readings that will prove the importance of this witness for a new edition of the poem.

Francesco Marzella
 University of Cambridge,
 Department of Anglo-Saxon, Norse and Celtic
 fm333@cam.ac.uk

§

Daniele Solvi, Nuove evidenze sull'apocrifo francescano «Absorbeat» (con un censimento della tradizione manoscritta dell'«Arbor vite» di Ubertino da Casale) pp. 257-81

Ubertino of Casale's Arbor vitae crucifixae Iesu includes a very short prayer that had been for a long time published among the opuscula of st. Francis of Assisi. The last two critical editors of Francis' writings – Kajetan Esser (1976) and Carlo Paolazzi (2009) – reject the prayer as apocryphal, while admitting that Francis could have known and used it. The paper, as part of the preparatory work for the critical edition of the Arbor, undertakes a careful analysis of the literary context and manuscript tradition of Ubertino's quotation and discusses new evidences, by which any connection between the «Absorbeat» and Francis of Assisi can be finally excluded. It also suggests that the false authorship could have been originated by an attempt by Bernardino of Siena to emendate an erroneous reading of Ubertino's passage. The Appendix of the paper (ed. by S. Nocentini) provides an updated inventory of the manuscripts (both complete and fragmentary) transmitting Ubertino's Arbor vitae.

Daniele Solvi
 Università della Campania “Luigi Vanvitelli” daniele.solvi@unicampania.it

§

Pietro Colletta, Il «De gestis Siculorum» di Nicolò Speciale: prime ricognizioni sulla tradizione manoscritta pp. 283-313

Nicolò Speciale's De gestis Siculorum sub Friderico rege et suis is one of the most interesting historiographic texts written in Sicily in the decades following the Vespro revolt of 1282. Nevertheless, a critical edition is not yet available (the last edition dates back to 1791). In this article, we provide, first of all, a catalog and a description of the manuscripts; furthermore, we observe some elements, which can be helpful in reconstituting the manuscript filiation. Finally, we reveal the results of the first survey in relation to the author's identity and provenance, the title of the work, its paratextual organization and the presence or absence of two final chapters, entitled De vita et conversatione regis Friderici and De epistola Henrici eremite ad Robertum regem.

Pietro Colletta
 Università degli Studi di Enna «Kore» pietro.colletta@unikore.it

§

Rino Modonutti, La «Tabula de libris Titi Livii» attribuita a Donato Albanzani pp. 315-46

The essay analyses the structure and the tradition of a tabula of Livy's Ab urbe condita libri transmitted by several fourteenth- and fifteenth-century manuscripts. The oldest seems to be MS Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, Par. lat. 5690, owned by Landolfo Colonna and then by Francesco Petrarca. Three codices ascribe this tabula paratext to Donato Albanzani, Petrarch's disciple and friend: The last section of the paper discusses such attribution, which seems reliable. The section of the tabula concerning Livy's books 1-4 is published as an Appendix.

Rino Modonutti
 Dipartimento di Studi Linguistici e Letterari - Università degli Studi di Padova
 rino.modonutti@unipd.it

§

Veronica Dadà, Filelfo, Boezio e la metrica latina dei «Carmina» pp. 347-67

Filelfo expressed his appreciation for Boethius' works since his early letters. This paper focuses on the specific contributions of Boethius' works – especially the poetry of the Consolation of Philosophy – on the lyric poetry of Filelfo's Carmina. The analysis is organized on three levels: first of all, for what concerns metrics, Filelfo resumes eight of the less common Boethian meters of the Consolation and reuses them in his Carmina, in order to obtain an effect of varietas. Thus, Boethius becomes Filelfo's main model, next to Horace, for the meters of the Carmina. The second level concerns the musical theory that Filelfo develops in his programmatic Carm. I 1, to state the magna vis of the lyric poetry: the exempla of Pythagoras, Empedocles and Ismenias go back to Boethius' De institutione musica (Mus. I 1). Filelfo had already quoted them in the prose of his Convivia Mediolanensia, in the discussion about music, so remarkable differences come to light between the transposition of the same Boethius' passages in the prose of the Convivia, on the one hand, and in the lyric poetry of the Carmina, on the other hand. The third level is related to stylistic and linguistic analysis, with the reuse of some significant iuncturae by Boethius, in analogous form and meaning, in specific verses of the Carmina.

Veronica Dadà
 Università di Pisa
 veronica.dada@fileli.unipi.it